

RWS Cleaning & Maintenance

Cleaning & Maintenance - basics

First and foremost, read and understand the manufacturer's instructions for both cleaning and maintenance and for safe operation of any airgun.

Quality airguns require only a small amount of routine maintenance; however, proper care is important. Lubricants like Chamber Lube and Spring Oil are literally used only 1 or 2 drops at a time, following the manufacturer's instructions. Over-lubrication as well as lack of lubrication can lead to a decrease in the satisfactory service life of a fine airgun. DO NOT use regular oils in the Air Compression Chamber or Mainspring area - use only approved lubricants.

Cleaning Pellets are hard felt "pellets" which are fired like a pellet to clean the bore. They are used for intermediate cleaning. When using Cleaning Pellets use 2 or 3 (more with more powerful airguns) at a time in the barrel and fire them in a safe direction.

Never dry-fire an airgun (fire without a pellet in place) unless the manufacturer specifically approves. When in doubt, assume an emphatic NO!

Each new airgun should be equipped with adequate cleaning/maintenance items. Also see Beeman. For cleaning from the muzzle (M-48, 52, 54) the FSI 3-in-1 Cleaning & Maintenance Kit is highly recommended.

RWS .177 Airgun Shooters Kit -
